Italian Shipping Subventions. From the Shipping Illustrated.

Since Italy first entered upon the policy of shipping subsidies, in the year 1885, the amount paid by the state has shown a constant tendency to increase, although the results achieved can hardly be regarded as brilliant. The subsidies fall into three classes-mileage premiums, premiums for coal carrying and premiums for shipbuilding and repairs. The ship building premiums were settled by the law of July 1, 1911, for a period of fil teen years. During the first five years 55 lire per ton are paid, during the second five years 50 lire, and during the third five years 45 lire, all for stee ships. Wooden ships receive a premium of 10 lire per ton. The shipping subventions have recently been rearranged by a law which comes into force July 1, 1913. This new law, which has now been ratified by the senate, remains in force for ten years, and provides for new and improved steamship lines and higher subventions. The latter are increased by 3,750,000 lire, and now amount to 16, 250,000 lire. For the lines to India, Aus tralla, the far east, north Africa and north Europe the subsidies amount to about 6,250,000 lire.

The Wireless Dream.

From the Chicago Journal. Guglielmo Marconi, inventor of the mos famous system of wireless telegraphy believes that in the near future power will be transmitted by wireless from place to place.

He believes the present system of transmission lines crude and wasteful. He holds that wireless transmission can be developed to the point where power will be generated at the waterfall or the coal mine and flashed almost any distance through the air to the place where the raw materials are awaiting manufacture, at a trifling fraction of the pres-

This is a dream, but it is not all a dream, and for the past century the dreams of inventors have come true. Power is transmitted by wireless now every time a wireless telegram is sent or received. The problem is to make that transmission commercially profitable and to send it only in a given direction. At present the aerial current is flashed out in every direction, just like the light from an uncovered candle. Whether the dream is realized in the lifetime of any one now alive, it is good to know the goal toward which men like Marconi are striving.
